This use of his name was a surprise here, at the Governor's home, where he has been and is considered good enough timber for the Governor ahip. For that office, however, he has never been a formal aspirant, for reasons highly honorable to himself. The sons highly honorable to himself. The Chronicle's mention of him in connection with the Rrilroad Commissionship has had the effect of directing atattention to his fitness and availability for the place, and within the past few days much interest has sprung up among his numerous friends here in Los Angeles on the subject. It is conceded that the selection of Governor.

THE SUNDAY LAW.

Opinions of Prominent National Democrats Thereon.

Most High, "Thou shall not bear false witness against thy neighbor." The establishment by law of a day of rest from labor is none the less a beneficent and humane regulation because of the Divine precept that upon that day "Thou shall not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant nor thy daughter, thy man servant nor thy salt form have not only assumed a position in antagonism to the interests and most profound convictions of society, but offensive to the sentiment of the best elements of the Democratic State Universely, but offensive to the sentiment of the best elements of the Democratic State Universely, and the necessity of statutory enact.

Most High, "Thou shall not bear false witness against thy neighbor." The establishment by law of a day of rest from labor is none the less a beneficent and humane regulation because of the Divine precept that upon that day "Thou shall not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates."

Judge Stephen J. Field, now of the CAPITAL SOAP CO., Sacramento, United States Supreme Court, and a and for sale by Bunger & Board of States United States Supreme Court, and a very distinguished Democrat, when Chief Justice of California, in rendering an opinion sustaining a Sunday law of the State similar to that now in the Code acid.

Come to my stables Sunday July 16, 1882 one

In the Code, said:

In its enactment the Legislature has given the sanction of law to a rule of conduct which the entire civilized world recognizes as essential to the physical and moral well-being of society. Upon no subject is there such a concurrence of opinion among philosophers, moralists and statesmen of all nations as on the necessity of periodical cessation. of opinion among philosophers, moralists and statesmen of all nations as on the necessity of periodical cessation from labor. One day in seven is the rule, founded on experience and sustained by science. There is no nation possessing any degree of civilization where the rule is not observed, either from the sanctions of the law or the sanctions of religion. This fact has not escaped the observation of men of science, and distinguished philosophers have not hesitated to pronounce the rule founded upon a law of our race.

The Legislature possesses the undoubted right to pass laws for the preservation of health and the promotion of good morals, and if it is of the opinion that periodical cessation from labor will tend to both, and thinks proper to carry its opinion into a statutory enactment on the subject, there is no power outside of its constituents which can sit in judgment upon its action.

Respecting the necessity of legislative enactments to assure the laborer's lay of rest, against the tendency of commercial competition and greed to increach upon it, he said, in the same pinion:

It is no answer to the requirements of pendent, and at liberty to work whenever they choose. Whether this be true or not in theory, it is false in fact; it is contradicted by every day's experience. The relations of superior and subordinate, master and servant, principal and clerk, always have and always will exist. Labor is in a great degree dependent on capital, and unless the exercise of the power which capital at fords is restrained, those who are obliged to labor will not possess the freedom for rest which they would otherwise exercise. The law steps in to restrain the power of capital. Its object is not to protect those who can rest at their pleasure, but to afford rest to those who need it, and who from the condition of society could not otherwise obtain it. Its aim is to prevent the physical and moral debility which spring from uninterrupted labor; and in this aspect it is a beneficent and merciful law. It gives one day to the poor and dependent from the enjoyment of which no capital or power is permitted to deprive them. It is theirs for repose, for social intercourse, for moral culture, and, if they choose, for divine worship.

course, for moral culture, and, if they choose, for divine worship.

As to the objection that Sunday was a day of religious observance by some sects, and the law for that reason unconstitutional, he said:

The power of selection being in the Legislature, there is no valid reason why Sunday should not be designated as well as any other day. Probably no day in the week could be taken which would not be subject to some objection. That the law operates with inconvenience to some is no argument against its constitutionality. Such inconvenience is incident to all general laws. A civil regulation cannot be converted into a religious institution because it is enforced on a day that a particular religious sect reard as sacred. The fact that the civil regulation finds support in the religious opinion of a vast majority of the people of California is no argument against its establishment. It would be fortunate for society if all wise civil rules obtained a ready obedience from the citizens, not merely from the requirements of the law, but from conscientious and religious convictions of their obligations. The law against homicide is not the less wise and necessary because the Divine command is, "Thou shall do no murder." The legislation against perjury is not the less useful and essential for the due administration of justice because the injunction comes from the dward administration of justice because the injunction comes from the Most High, "Thou shall not bear false witness against thy neighbor." The establishment by law of a day of rest from the bear is mona that less a beneficent and other than the less as beneficent and always to many the less as beneficent and other than the less as beneficent and always to many the less as beneficent and other particular probables and the less a beneficent and other particular probables and the less as beneficent and other particular probables and the less as beneficent and other probables are the less as beneficent and other probables are the less as a beneficent and other probabl
